By Royal Cortissoz

The paintings brought together by the late Ralph H. White, of Boston, and just now on exhibition at the American Art Galleries, form one more of those collections in which, as in a historical chapter, we may behold a characteristic phase of our æsthetic development. Mr. White repeated in his experience a familiar story. He began by buying the pictures he liked, pretty pictures, facile Continental studies of costume, highly finished sentimentalities.

Then as the years passed he learned to like better things, and he ended by assembling the collection of a connoisseur. There are paintings here which could have been acquired only by an instructed lover of the fine arts. They will invite spirited competition, we believe, when the sale takes place at the Plaza on to-morrow and Friday evenings.

A Cult for Daubigny

The best qualities of the collection come out in the examples of the Barbizon school. Mr. White's "Paysage Britannique" is a souvenir of Corot's early period, an interesting landscape in which the few trees and especially the great oak in the foreground beautifully disclose the master's gift for the delineation of form.

The whole picture is a delightfully personal affair. From other owners there came, by the way, two later Corots (Nos. 125 and 128), which are uncommonly beautiful things, small pictures, perfect in composition and perfect in their diaphanous tenderness. Mr. White found one conventional Rousseau, the "Forest at Fontainebleau," but it is superb in its handling of woodland masses. Its companion is the "Bridge at Macon," a painter's picture, a rare example of the delicacy which was also within Rousseau's scope.

This collector had something like a cult for Daubigny, and every one of his six landscapes is a gem, every one following the artist's habitual mode of design, but all of them conveying fresh and fine impressions. Most captivating of all is the "Landscape With Figures."

From another collector comes the remarkable "Hameau aux Dunes," a sketch painted on panel, which shows Daubigny in his most intimate mood. There is a single example of Dupre, the little "Fisherman's Home," an exceptional a souvenir as the landscape just cited.

One of the two figure subjects by Diaz belonging to the White estate, the "Woman and Child," is a good piece, but more important than either of them is the landscape from another collection, the "Approaching Storm," which is equally impressive in its design and in its dramatic sky. Only one of the three Troyons, the "Ploughing," evokes favorable comment.

Impressionism Lacking

Impressionism evidently made no great appeal to Mr. White, and from other estates not named in the catalogue come the few excellent illustrations of the school that appear in the exhibition—Monet's beautiful "Coastal Landscape," Boudin's glittering "Dunkerque Harbor" and the exquisite "Dutch Canal by Moonlight," painted by Jongkind. The Dutch school at large is interestingly represented.

There are good examples of Mauve, Bastert, De Bock and others. It is an easy transition on the same level, if not to a higher one, from these pictures to the landscapes of the American school. There are two small paintings by George Inness which possess fine qualities and there is an earlier work of his done on a large scale which is a truly splendid page from his history.

This "Sunset on the River" dates from 1867, a time when the Hudson River influence should, humanly speaking, have hardened his style and squeezed the sap out of his work. But in the breadth and luminosity of this noble canvas the distinction of his prime is clearly prefigured. With the landscapes by Inness we may group the three or four Blakelocks and the pictures by Wyant, Bruce Crane and J. Francis Murphy. The American contingent well holds its own.

Traversing the remaining works, one is occupied quite literally in separating the wheat from the chaff, though even as we say this we recall a curious episode in the matter of the chaff. Anything of Vibert's would, as a rule, go automatically into that category, but the observer must think twice before he thus dismisses the charming Spanish study, "Entrance to the Monastery."

This is not the typical, mechanically painted Vibert at all, but a labor of love executed by a true artist, who was for once moved simply to please himself. It belongs of right in the company of those thoroughly artistic things which we note in the more miscellaneous wing of the exhibition, things like the two lovely Monticellis, the bit of still life by Vollon, the capital landscape by that little known painter, Marilhat, the pictures by Isabey and the several characteristic paintings by Jacque.

The space at the American Art Galleries not occupied by pictures is filled to overflowing with the porcelains, early pottery and other Orientalia left by the late Ernest A. Bischoff. These things are to be sold through five afternoon sessions which began yesterday. The collection is superior to that which might ordinarily be expected where the stock of a dealer is concerned.

It begins on the threshold with a really remarkable group of large Ming statuettes, including an extraordinary pair of monumental lions, all of these objects notable for their rich glazing, and it culminates in the uppermost room with an amazing display of blue and white.

Between these two spectacular groups there lie any number of beautiful snuff bottles in various substances, many fine works in bronze and other metals, important Buddhist carvings and glowing companies of single color glazes and decorated porcelains. There are also half a dozen huge carved and painted screens. There are more than a thousand numbers in the catalogue, a rich array of treasures of an unusually uniform quality.

He is being received by two men in long blue silk coats, one of whom bows to kiss his hand, while the other points to a doorway on the right. The Sheik is accompanied by a man in loose white robe, who carries a red coral rosary, and followed by a boy attendant who walks ahead of a handsome man, with iron-gray hair showing beneath his turban. Beside the latter walks an old man, whose gray hair projects wildly from his head. He wears a necklace of crimson beads and carries a staff. In advance of the crowd which throngs the gateway at the back of the court rides a man on a donkey. 117—INDIAN SUMMER

Height, $28\frac{1}{2}$ inches; width, $22\frac{1}{4}$ inches

A SOFT haze in the late autumn air veils the landscape tenuously, smoothing its details into a vagueness of line and surface, revealing the delicate blend of its fading colors in low and distant harmonics. A hill enters in the left middle distance, wooded its crest and green its slope as it vanishes beyond a dull copse before which slender birch saplings rise in silvery lines. In front of the copse the arc of a brook in the foreground is bordered by grasses yellow and red, and the water reflects the colorful shadows of the copse mass. On the right, meadows in the broad half-shadow of the hill range away to a distant yellow field of higher ground.

118—AFTER THE SHOWER

Height, 12¼ inches; length, 18¼ inches

A SUMMER afternoon shower has passed over a green landscape of hill and valley, and the sun is out again diffusing warm light within the murky atmosphere. In the foreground a flower-bordered pool reflects the light of the western sky, between the trunks of trees whose leafage aloft blots the sky out and puts the foreground grass in shadow. In the middle distance a woman and a child walk across a green meadow in the sunshine, toward a town whose houses and church emerge from among many trees skirting the foot of circumscribing hills.

119—VILLAGE STREET, MOONLIGHT

Height, 19 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches; length, 25 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches

At the end of the village street, dark, shaggy masses of foliage show against a deep blue sky, pierced with several stars and lighted by a moon, invisible on the left. Two figures are vaguely distinguishable, passing beside a cottage with high-pitched roof, from a window in which gleams an orange-yellow light. This is on the right of the street, and is succeeded nearer to the front by a cottage with red-tiled roof, in front of which stands a cart, painted blue. Next to it is a house, whose steep roof of thatch is surmounted by a coping of tiles. A gateway, with brick piers, and the angle of a reddish roof, close in the right of the foreground. On the left of the roadway lie the scattered shadows of trees that are outside the scene.

120—DUTCH CANAL BY MOONLIGHT

(Panel)

Height, 16 inches; length, 25½ inches

AGAINST the luminosity of the moonlit sky a windmill rises darkly on the right bank of the canal. In the shadow beneath it a barge is being brought to its mooring by two men, one of whom hauls on a rope while the other pushes with a pole. In the centre of the stream, a boat with its sail down is being poled along by two men. It is moving in the direction of a tall, arched bridge, supported on three piers, behind which are dimly visible another windmill and some trees. The moon is at full, surrounded by a scattered aureole of warm, yellowish clouds.

Height, 13 inches; length, 18 inches

IN a green farmyard showing a trodden gray path across it in the foreground, a black and white cow stands headed to the right, beside the path, her head slightly lowered over a low square trough of gray wood. Beyond her a peasant woman in gray and red, with a blue and white cap, stands facing the spectator and looking down, across the cow's neck. A green bank and gray fence and the foliage of trees, in the background, close up the view, all but closing out the sky, which appears only in a corner at the right.

Height, 20 inches; length, 26 inches

A YOUNG peasant woman of sturdy frame and rosy face, in black waist, white underwaist and blue apron, is portrayed in the foreground, striving to urge a black and white cow by the aid of its tether to leave its grazing and accompany her homeward. In the deep grass wild flowers spring up, other cows are lying down near by, and still more of the kine stretch away in distant meadows, in the calm of the twilight hour.

Height, 18 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches; length, 26 inches

THE wall of the stable interior is a silvery bluish-drab, illuminated from the upper left by a streak of light, which falls across a portion of the plaster on which a lantern hangs. In the centre of the floor stand two ewes and two well-grown lambs, all facing to the front, where a dark brown hen is scratching in the straw. To the left of this group are two other hens, beside a sheep that is lying down. Over on the right, a lamb is reaching up to a rack, stuffed with yellow fodder. Meanwhile, in the centre of the middle distance, through an opening into an inner stable, the back of the shepherd, clad in a blue blouse, shows against the golden-brown obscurity.

(Panel)

Height, 22 inches; length, 27 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches

DARK storm clouds which arch the sky are over the centre of the composition, where the light of the sun bursting through touches creamy-white clouds with a hint of gold and reveals the approaching rain in the distance, along the edges of the visible landscape. The horizon line is one of low trees densely set. Before them lies a vale generally level but of rough, irregular and varied surface—grain-fields golden and meadows verdant, weed-patches yellow and brown, and in the foreground lichen-covered gray and purplish rocks about a spring-pool. Beyond the pool, in the middle distance, a bent peasant woman, wending her slow way toward a tree-clump at the left of the water.

SAULAIE AU BORD DE L'EAU

Height, 12 $\frac{3}{4}$ inches; length, 16 inches

POLLARD willows in the foreground line the border of a stream which enters into view from the right, and, indenting a grassy shore of the centre-ground, passes out of sight amid woods in the distance. Near the pollards, in the lush herbage of the foreground, a little girl, standing, nestles against a red-capped young woman seated on the ground, who turns her head toward the spectator; and at right of them a third figure is seen, seated on the grass and looking toward them. At left a haphazard picket fence comes to an angle at the water's edge, and beyond the fence the middle distance is thick with saplings and the atmosphere in which they are seen is misty. The river shows woodland and cloud shadows on its placid bosom, and the sky toward the right is creamy and a vague, veiled blue.

ON the right short, twisted and leaning trees show thick foliage of deep green and of warm, rich browns and light gold, as they stand outposts of the dense wood back of them, and rise toward a sky of darkening blue. From the left the rays of a setting sun which is not seen illuminate the rich leafage aloft and penetrate below, accenting the patches of white fungus on the gray trunks. They bring into relief too in the middle distance the figures of a peasant woman and her cows, in a clearing, where the illuminated herbage is in bright contrast to the shadowed vegetation in the foreground.

(Panel)

Height, 14½ inches; length, 26¼ inches

DUNES high along the left and receding in perspective in the distance protect a low-lying French landscape on the right, its surface varied but exhibiting but few trees—a landscape suggesting the north of France. At their entrance the dunes are creamy and gray in their sandy outcroppings, with greenish grass patches near their broken crests, and occasional warm mahogany tones where dried vegetation picks out points of their sloping surfaces. At the foot of the slope near the foreground three persons are seated, their apparel supplying notes of brown and black, scarlet and white, standing out from the sombre and commingled hues of the foreground herbage. In the middle distance a hamlet of gray gables and dull red and brownish roofs is sheltered in a rift in the dune ridge, and extends back into the lowlands, with now and then a tree breaking the skyline. The sky is one of grayish-white and creamy-gray clouds, with a tenuous veil of less dense vapor permitting at the left a suggestion of its turquoise depths beyond.

("Passage du Gué")

Height, 19½ inches; length, 29¼ inches

A BROAD and shallow stream winding through a pastoral and sylvan countryside of France emerges into view from between green banks, where it has just held a lateral course, when it turns sharply forward near the centre of the picture to occupy all of the right foreground. Here at the bend, and near the hither bank, a white horse knee-deep in the water and headed with its rider for the farther shore pauses and turns its head back toward the bank at the left. Its rider is a bare-footed peasant in dull gray and blue, with a red cap. On the bank at the left, toward which the horse is looking, two women and a small girl are seen at the foot of a sturdy beech of crooked trunk, whose foliage overhangs the stream and rises beyond the picture limits. Beneath its boughs the eye looks to a low and dense wood at the left, and to a broad meadow reaching from it across to the right of the composition, occupying all of the middle distance, and bounded in the distance by an indefinite woodland above which a red building rises toward the right. The landscape is in softened sunlight and transparent shadow, creamy clouds mass near the horizon in a robin's-egg sky, and their reflections brighten the current of the stream.

152—VENICE

Height, $25\frac{3}{4}$ inches; length, 32 inches

UNDER a blue and greenish sky in which creamy banks of cumuli mount along the horizon, the Dogana and the domes of the Salute and the great architectural masses within the angle of the canals about them rise in clear view and brilliant light. Toward the right and the Grand Canal the line of buildings is in transparent shadow, emphasizing the more the brilliant golden light illumining the walls on the nearer side of the angle, before which masts innumerable and sails of rich color are crowded at the water's edge. The water is a dense robin's-egg blue, with ruffled surface brightened and made softly colorful by reflections of the white and golden walls and the rich chromatic hues of the sails. At left in the foreground, market boats and a gondola, which is moving toward the right.

Signed at the lower right, ZIEM.

Property of a Private Owner.

153—LANDSCAPE

Height, 26½ inches; length, 38½ inches

ON the right a gray and white farmhouse with tiled and gabled roofs stands among pollards and other trees on the low grassy bank of a river, and in front of it is a blue-shirted boy in a boat. The stream extends across the picture in the foreground, reflecting at the left the outlines of a group of farm buildings on the farther shore, where feathery poplars rise above a line of low trees running into a meadow.

154—LA CHASSE

Height, 32¼ inches; length, 47½ inches

No man is visible but the pack are in full cry after a fleeing stag in an open forest. Here at centre in the coarse brush of a low foreground are four hounds, with four more close upon them on higher land at the left, the leaders being already almost at the border of a stream in the middle distance which the stag has just crossed. He is seen running, in the sun on the farther side, near a monarch tree whose foliage is green while that of its nearest neighbor is yellow and a warm autumn brown.

155—SUMMER LANDSCAPE: HAYMAKERS

Height, 25 inches; length, 36 inches

SUNSHINE and cloud shadow on a grayish day of summer dapple a landscape of low and rolling fields, fields green and brown and yellow, reaching over a wide countryside which declines somewhat from low wooded hills lying dark at the left and running along the horizon. Harvesters are at work in the foreground, and in the middle distance hay is being loaded, and within the trees along the hillside lies a hamlet, below its church with gray conical steeple.

Signed at the lower left, DAUBIGNY.

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.

156—BOHEMIAN ALPS

Height, 32½ inches; length, 55½ inches

ROUNDED peaks of the mountains rise in massive groupings on either side of a blue and shimmering river, which is made a mirror of rich color by the reflections of their sides and of the sky and of the landscape, architecture, shipping and costumery of the surroundings. On the water are boats variously laden, and on land is a laden cart, with people seen in the road about it, and in cargoes, sails and costumes are colors rich and varied. On the right a fortified town, running up the mountain side, and a castle on a cliff above it, and at left a town at the water side.

Signed at bottom, near the right, J. B. PYNE.

Height, 21½ inches; length, 33¾ inches

IN a foreground of turquoise water, many-oared barges and a single sailing vessel, with other craft in the indefinite distance, under a sky which at the zenith is a paler turquoise than the water, and which above the horizon glows with a soft golden-yellow sunset light. At right, in mist or haze, the great mosque of Suleiman, with its tall minarets, and sundry buildings of the city of the Golden Horn.

159—SEASHORE AND FISHERFOLK

Height, 26 inches; length, 37 inches

170. —

FROM a green sea reaching to a vague sunset horizon under a clouded sky, combers roll in and break white upon a broad beach of yellow sand, their farthest runs coming well up the foreground. A black-hulled fishing boat brought in and anchored at high tide lies on the sands, a cart is loading from her and another cart is moving away, and men and women are busy both about the boat and in the wet sands.

ASHER B. DURAND, P.N.A.

AMERICAN: 1796—1886

160—LANDSCAPE WITH FIGURE

Height, 30 inches; length, 41¾ inches

IN the middle distance a valley in a mountainous country cradles a lake or tranquil stream whose grassy shores and surrounding lawns are kept as a park, with numerous dense and flourishing trees standing singly and in groups. An outlet or a continuance of the stream runs through the foreground, passing, near the centre, between huge gray rocks and moving beneath the shadow of a hill toward the left. Sunshine from the left strikes variously upon the landscape, and in the foreground to right of the stream illumines the figure of a brightly dressed young woman carrying a basket, and walking toward the spectator.

Signed at bottom centre, on a rock, A. B. DURAND.

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.

GEORGE INNESS, N.A.

AMERICAN: 1825—1894

17000.

Seaman Agt.

161—SUNSET ON THE RIVER

Height, 30 inches; length, 44 inches

MOUNTAINS in the background lie dark against a cobalt sky, with dark gray clouds settling over them and drifting below their summits, on the left, while on the right their green slopes fall away under brighter skies, revealing a distant deep blue horizon under strata of rosy sunset clouds, above which are banks of billowy cumuli. In front of the mountains the whole middle distance and foreground—a broad valley of rich green fields and lightly wooded tracts—is flooded with sunshine, brilliant rays of the declining sun, which come from the right. In the centre of the valley a river gleams white and blue, and on either bank the rich green fields are the home of many cows, a considerable herd grazing and lying down in the foreground. A mill appears on the river bank, and houses on the slopes of either side, and at the distant right a white church steeple is picked out at the edge of a cloud shadow falling upon treetops.

Signed at the lower left, G. INNESS, 1867.

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.

JOHN FREDERICK KENSETT, N.A.

AMERICAN: 1818—1872

162—WINDSOR CASTLE

Height, 30 inches; length, 44 inches

THE great pile of the castle rises gray on the right above buildings of dusky red, the whole in a grayish mist, which obscures the horizon and yields aloft to drifting masses of vapor of light creamy hue. In the foreground the mist is less dense, veiled sunshine penetrates it and marks the shadows of trees on a green pasture where a numerous herd is seen, on the right of the narrow river which fills the left of the foreground and reflects the creamy sky. Boats are visible in the stream, and in a pathway on the bank is a figure.

Signed at the lower right, J. F. K., 1867.

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.

ALPHONSE M. DE NEUVILLE

FRENCH: 1836—1885

163 —CROSSING THE FORD:

FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR

Height, 47½ inches; width, 31½ inches

A MILITARY scene during the Franco-Prussian War. On a high and open bank at the left, viewed against a background of woods enveloped in an autumn haze, and thinly screened by trees in front, forces of French infantry at halt recede into the vagueness. Before them at the crest of the bank mounted officers are grouped about the colors. The land descends to a rippling river a bit of which appears in the foreground, the slope supports birches and brush retaining leafage in autumn hues, and along the edge of the river are men on outpost or sentry duty. Coming down the decline is a small detail of brilliantly clad mounted lancers sent forward as skirmishers or on reconnaissance, the horse of the foremost rider being guided into the stream by a veteran infantryman.

Signed at the lower left, A. DE NEUVILLE, 1880.

Property of a Private Owner.

MARTIN RICO

SPANISH: 1850—1908

164—VENICE

Height, 32 inches; length, 52 inches

THREE gorgeous palaces face the spectator, entering the picture from the right, and to left of them green gardens with many trees of softly fluttering foliage abut upon the canal, with the upper parts of more palaces and the towers of churches appearing above the trees. Doves fly over the tallest roof tops in a pale turquoise sky. In the blue and rippling canal are numerous gondolas with passengers, and a few boats with red and yellow sails.

Signed at the right, midway, RICO.

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.

ÉMILE VAN MARCKE

FRENCH: 1827—1890

165—THE BELL COW

Height, 58¾ inches; length, 79 inches

AN impressive composition both in its cattle and its landscape, with interest centred upon the white cow giving the picture its title, but by no means monopolized by her. Others of the herd appear not as mere incidents but as important elements of the composition, and the landscape is one at once of power and repose, of depth and variety. The white cow stands athwart the view to left, with head turned forward, ankle-deep in a stream in which she has just cooled her pink muzzle. Her turned head, of forceful modeling, throws a transparent shadow upon her soft, almost shaggy coat which elsewhere is illumined by sunshine. Back of her the light accents the bark of birches at the corner of a wood the rest of which is dark in shadow, and amongst the birches is a red cow with a white face. To left of the white cow are a black one and a tawny one with a white face, lying down, and others are seen in the background, in a flat field bordering the wood and reaching to a low horizon under an active sky of white and gray clouds.

Signed at the lower left, EM. VAN MARCKE.

Property of a Private Owner.

ADOLPHE MONTICELLI

FRENCH: 1824—1886

166—EMPRESS EUGENIE AND ATTENDANTS

Height, 63 $\frac{1}{4}$ inches; width, 38 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches

GROUP painting of seven figure portraits, five ladies and two children, in fine apparel and in a soft and mellow light, against a conventional woodland background, dark with light accents on the tree trunks and a single glimpse of sky. The Empress, the young and beautiful "Spanish Woman" as the first figure, is seated facing the right with figure three-quarters to the front and features seen in profile, her head inclined as she looks down at the two children at her knee, one standing, the other seated and playing with a lap dog. Back of the Empress and close to her two of her ladies are seated, reclining the one upon the other, and back of them two others stand, with heads together. All are in décolleté gowns of rich fabric, their colors ruby, gold and greenish-turquoise, scarlet, pink, brown and peacock-blue.

Painted at the order of the Empress for her apartments at Versailles.

From the Catholina Lambert Collection, No. 180. $2000, A. G. - H. M. 8000

Property of the Estate of the late RALPH H. WHITE, Boston.
